

Healthy Intentions can be hard

- busy schedules make students skip meals
- convenient meals = unhealthy
- sleep is not prioritized

Students sacrifice one aspect for another

- students risk sleep over assignments
- stress
- some students (including me occasionally) prioritize social life over school work

Phenomenon & Questions

College students attempt a consistent and active lifestyle while balancing a social life, sleep, and diet which creates patterns of unhealthy behaviors and sickness.

Q: How much does social life effect these habits? Why do students prioritize some aspects of their health to sacrifice others?

Campus Life

- Students stay active better in groups
- students are balancing school w/ fitness
- group exercises are more fun for students

Environment

- students are forced to walk significant amounts, but also enjoy it
- good weather has encouraged more student activity
- dining hall options force students to certain meals daily
